SHE WHO WEEPS

(Palm Sunday: Isaiah 50:4-7; Philippians 2:6-11; Luke 22:14—23:56)

The outline of the Passion is the same in all four Gospels but there are details that are unique to each one. For example, Luke alone records Jesus' encounter with the weeping women on his way to Calvary. He tells them, "Daughters of Jerusalem, do not weep for me; weep instead for yourselves and for your children." A similar painful image is used by Our Lady of La Salette: "Children under the age of seven will be seized with trembling and die in the arms of those who hold them."

Anyone who has lost a child can understand the weight of grief evoked by these words. At La Salette Mary weeps, in a sense, for herself and for her children, her people. Her tears are a source of consolation for us. They are also a renewed invitation to return to the Lord with all our heart.

I am reminded of other biblical texts: "No longer shall the sound of weeping be heard there, or the sound of crying. No longer shall there be in Jerusalem an infant who lives but a few days, nor anyone who does not live a full lifetime" (Isaiah 65:19-20); "He will wipe every tear from their eyes, and there shall be no more death or mourning, wailing or pain, for the old order has passed away" (Revelation 21:4).

The old order of sin and death has been replaced by the new order of grace—of hope, of life, of love—by Jesus' death and resurrection.

Luke's Passion also includes three "last words" of Jesus not found in the other Gospels.

The first is: "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." At La Salette, Our Lady makes us painfully aware of our offenses, but assures us that she pleads ceaselessly on our behalf.

The second is addressed to a confessed criminal: "Amen, I say to you, today you will be with me in Paradise." The Beautiful Lady highlights the importance and the benefit of conversion.

And the third is: "Father, into your hands I commend my spirit." In encouraging us to pray, Mary teaches us to adopt Jesus' attitude of absolute trust.

None of these similarities should surprise us, coming from her who stood at the foot of the cross and wept over us at La Salette.
